

FFCWS Data Users APPAM Communities Meetup

The Future of Families and Child Wellbeing Study (FFCWS, formerly “Fragile Families and Child Wellbeing Study”) is a 20+ year longitudinal birth cohort study of families with children born between 1998-2000. FFCWS currently offers six waves of publicly available data on a wide variety of policy-relevant topics as well as rich contextual data through a restricted use contract application.

This community meeting is an opportunity for researchers who are currently working with, or interested in working with, this rich dataset to gather and discuss their work, share advice for working with the dataset, and to hear updates from the FFCWS data support team.

Please join us for this opportunity to network and have your questions answered by members of the study team and experienced data users. Our team will also share updates about our current wave of data collection, around the 22nd birthdays of our focal children, and what to expect in the forthcoming data release!
